Overview:

Of late, there is a rise of populist policies in India which reflects the growing assertion of regional power and the lack of central authority in making consistent strategy for the future. With a perceived increase in the level of inequality in the distribution of resources, the demand for a redistribution policy in favour of the common man has gained acceptance in democracy. Political parties are forced to pander to whims of the majorities for their survival and continuance in the office. This has led to the proliferation of a subsidy culture along with various welfare schemes and financial dole outs for the benefit of the common man. This in turn, has put undue strain on the fiscal balance of the economy, rise in budget deficit and public debt. This has also created a scope for pressure group politics at the state and the regional level, which has ultimately increased the profligacy of the government beyond the optimum level. This short sighted populist measures which are meant for the immediate gratification of the poor ultimately affects them the most in the long run.

The present seminar intends to touch upon this crucial issue affecting the common mass of the country. It tries to analyze the various populist schemes and its repercussions, baleful consequences of competitive populism between the states and the whole country, rise of various subsidy schemes and the concurrent rise of debt and deficits, growing rhetoric of populism in the most powerful countries of the world in relation to their trade and domestic policies vis-à-vis other nations and finally the need for an appropriate frame work for the economy which will make it stable and sustainable.
